Listing of domestic ventilation systems with or without heat recovery

- including test results of more than 200 ventilation systems
- regularly updated

For more than twelve years, the Europäisches Testzentrum für Wohnungslüftungsgeräte (TZWL) e. V. (European Testing Center for Domestic Ventilation Systems) has been publishing the Bulletin – Listing of domestic ventilation systems with or without heat recovery. Since 2012 the TZWL-eBulletin is published digitally as PDF.

The eBulletin is used by political and scientific institutions as the essential knowledge base for domestic ventilation systems in Germany. It informs neutrally about technical features and performance quality of tested ventilation units.

More than 45 manufacturers are partaking in the eBulletin to make data about their ventilation systems openly accessible to architects, ventilation experts and the general public. By publishing the eBulletin, the TZWL ensures higher transparency and promotes the development of technical standards.

Supported by public and political sponsoring, the eBulletin is free to download on the websites of TZWL and the sponsors. More than 40.000 downloads show the high public demand of this service.

The eBulletin also serves as part of the Infoportal Wohnungslüftung (Information Portal for Domestic Ventilation, IPW) on the website of TZWL.

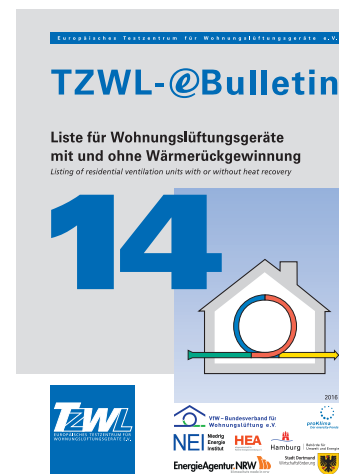

Contents

The eBulletin consists of two parts: scientific articles and listing of ventilation systems.

Relevant articles, published by scientists, engineers and political decision makers, inform about the current state of ventilation technology. Main core of the eBulletin is the tabular listing of ventilation systems. Short descriptions inform about technical features, official labels and independent test results. The listing includes all current types of domestic ventilation systems with or without heat recovery, including combinations with heat pumps.

Whilst the scientific articles are updated on a yearly basis, new ventilation systems are added to the list regularly.
